

REASON & REVELATION
A Monthly Journal of Christian Evidences

APRIL 2016 • VOL. 36 • NO. 4

GOD'S PROVIDENCE AND THE PROBLEM OF EVIL

Should Christians
Favor Accepting Syrian Refugees?

The AP Curriculum

God's Providence and the Problem of Evil

Kyle Butt, M.Div.

Article In Brief...

Throughout the course of human history, God has worked His ultimate will through both miraculous and providential ways. Skeptics have argued that a loving, all-powerful God cannot exist in light of the evil and suffering that is in the world. By factoring God's providence into the discussion, the "problem of evil" does not rationally or philosophically challenge the existence of God. In addition, an understanding of providence can help those who are suffering see God's will for their lives.

IN 2008, best-selling author and agnostic professor Bart Ehrman wrote a book titled God's Problem: How the Bible Fails to Answer Our Most Important Question—Why We Suffer (2008). In the book, Ehrman presented his case for how the biblical answer to the problem of evil is insufficient. His analysis is incorrect and lacking in many ways, but the title of his book brings us to a crucial question regarding evil—why would Ehrman and a bulk of the unbelieving world seek such an answer from the Bible? Why put forth so much effort attempting to refute the biblical answer to suffering?

In truth, the "problem of evil" argument is built on the foundation of what the Bible says about God. As it is historically set out, the "problem of evil" contends that the three premises (1) God is all-loving; (2) God is all-powerful; and (3) evil exists, cannot all be true. Where did these three premises originate? The third, that evil exists, is a matter of personal experience and knowledge that virtually all humans can know intuitively. But the first two premises, that God is all-loving and all-powerful, are distinctly set forth in the Bible as attributes of God. Without the biblical insistence that God is all-powerful and all-loving, there would be no "problem of evil." With that in mind, it would be unfair and dishonest for the skeptic to demand that the Christian answer the problem of evil without reference to the Bible. Yet, that is precisely what Ehrman and others expect. They attempt to discredit the biblical answers to the problem of evil. These attacks against the Bible's answer have been unsuccessful (Warren, 1972; Miller, 2015). In fact, one of the most impressive responses to evil is the biblical understanding of God's work through providence. For the purposes of this discussion, we will define providence as the way God orchestrates His will through natural laws. This idea is contrasted with God's miraculous intervention in human affairs. A miracle, such as Jesus walking on water or God's empowering Moses to put his hand into his cloak and it become leprosy, is a recognizable overriding of certain natural laws. God's providence, on the other hand, is seen in cases where God works through natural laws to accomplish His will.

To illustrate this difference, let us consider specific examples. In 2 Kings 19, the story is told of Sennacherib's campaign against the land of Judah. The evil king and his Assyrian army encircled Jerusalem and were confident that they would soon crush the city. That did not happen, because one night an "angel of the Lord went out, and killed in the camp of the Assyrians one hundred and eighty-five thousand; and when the people arose early in the morning, there were the corpses—all dead" (2 Kings 19:35). This episode is a clear example of God miraculously intervening in human affairs. On a different occasion, the prophet Micaiah warned Ahab, the king of Israel, that he would be destroyed if he attacked Ramoth Gilead. Ahab ignored the warning from God's prophet and attacked the city anyway. In the course of the events, "a certain man drew a bow at random, and struck the king of Israel between the joints of his armor" (1 Kings 22:34). Ahab died of his wound exactly as God had foretold. Ahab's death, however, came about through what we would call natural events, not miraculous ones.

Another contrast between providential and miraculous involvement can be seen in the lives of Mary and Hannah. In the New Testament narrative of Jesus' birth, the Bible states that Mary would miraculously conceive Jesus even though she was a virgin (Matthew 1:18-25). In contrast, we read about the birth of Samuel to Hannah. She prayed earnestly for a son and God answered her prayer. Hannah's conception and birth of Samuel, however, were not miraculous but came about through her union with her husband Elkanah (1 Samuel 1:19-20; see Jackson, "A Study of Divine Providence"). Samuel's birth provides an excellent illustration of God's providence.

Throughout the course of human history God has worked His will through miraculous and providential means. In many eras of history He has used both at the same time, but in some instances and epochs, He has worked primarily through providence with very little or no recognizable miraculous activity. It is important to understand this truth, since it is often affirmed that if God has worked miracles in the past to aid his people, then He "should" be doing the same today. For instance, Bart Ehrman demands, "If he [God] could do miracles for his people throughout the Bible, where is he today when your son is killed in a car accident, or your husband gets multiple sclerosis, or civil war is unleashed in Iraq, or the Iranians decide to pursue their nuclear ambitions?" (p. 274). This idea is well-illustrated on Marshall Brain's Web site whywontgodhealampetees.com (2014). According to Brain, the fact that God does not miraculously regrow limbs proves that He is imaginary. In chapter 5 of his material, he says, "Nothing happens when we pray for amputated limbs. God never regenerates lost limbs through prayer.... Does God answer prayers? If so, then how do we explain this disconnection between God and amputees?" (2014).

Notice that Brain and Ehrman insist that if God is capable of miracles, then we should be seeing them now. But why must that be the case? Could it be that an all-knowing God has very good reasons why He is not at work in the same miraculous ways He worked in the past? In addition, the same Bible that tells us about God's miracles also lays out a very strong case for God's working through providential means. To demand that God must operate in the way that we insist He operate is more than slightly presumptuous, especially in light of the fact that He has given us ample information about other ways He works.

This play by unbelievers is more clearly seen in the proverbial story of the atheistic professor who stands before a class of freshmen and dares God to strike him dead. When nothing happens, the professor glibly comments, "I thought not," and assumes he has made his point. Could it be possible that there are good reasons God does not strike the professor dead? Certainly. Maybe God knows the man will repent in the future. Maybe He knows that this professor will find a cure for cancer, and although he will lose his soul, he will save many lives. The possibilities are virtually endless.

Ehrman and other unbelievers challenge Christians to produce modern miracles as evidence that God intervenes in the world today. They do so, however, refusing to recognize two important truths. First, even during the ages of human history when God performed miracles, He did not intervene to stop all suffering. People still got sick, had accidents, broke bones, suffered emotionally, and died. It is as if the skeptic insists that the Bible paints a picture of a God who swooped in miraculously to stop all suffering. Such was never the case. Miracles were isolated events designed to confirm the validity of the message of certain divine messengers (Miller, 2003). The Bible has never presented them as a wholesale answer to the problem of pain and suffering. Second, to insist that God must use miracles today discounts the pervasive biblical theme of providence. Throughout history, one of God's primary modes of operation has been to providentially work through natural laws. To deny that this is the case is to turn a deaf ear to a massive amount of biblical testimony.

A BIBLICAL CASE FOR PROVIDENCE

WHEN many people think about God working through miracles, they have a picture in mind of a God

Reason & Revelation is published monthly by Apologetics Press, Inc. Periodicals postage paid at Montgomery, AL. Postmaster: Send address changes to Reason & Revelation, 230 Landmark Dr., Montgomery, AL 36117; ISSN: [1542-0922] USPS# 023415.

Apologetics Press is a non-profit, tax-exempt work dedicated to the defense of New Testament Christianity. Copyright © 2016. All rights reserved.

Editor:

Dave Miller, M.A., M.Div., M.A.R., Ph.D.*
(*Communication, Southern Illinois University)

Associate Editor:

Jeff Miller, M.S., Ph.D.*
(*Biomechanical Engineering, Auburn University)

Annual Subscription Rates:

$12.00	Domestic
$10.00	Domestic Bulk (5+ to same address)
$12.00	Canada & Overseas (plus shipping)

General inquiries, changes of address, or international callers:

Phone: (334) 272-8558
Fax: (334) 270-2002

Orders:

Phone: (800) 234-8558
Fax: (800) 234-2882

On-line Web store/catalog, subscription order/renewal form, current issues, archives, and other information (all orders processed on a secure server):

URL: www.ApologeticsPress.org
URL: espanol.ApologeticsPress.org/espanol
E-mail: mail@ApologeticsPress.org

Discovery—Scripture & Science for Kids is a sister publication for children. For more information, please contact our offices or visit the Discovery Web site at:

URL: www.DiscoveryMagazine.com

Who periodically interrupts the regular flow of things and tinkers with the laws that are usually in place. They see God as an intruder into the natural order that He initially set up and that He leaves alone for a large portion of time. It is as if God has created a cosmic aquarium filled with fish, rocks, hiding areas, and a water filtering system. He sits outside the system watching patiently until He is needed, dipping His hand into the system to add something here or take something away there. The problem with this view is that it pictures a system that somehow works independently of God. In this system it is thought that if God does not miraculously intervene, then the system still works fine.

The Bible provides a picture of God's activity in the world that is much different from this model. Instead of a self-sustaining system that God created at the beginning and primarily has left to its own devices, Scripture teaches that the entire system constantly relies on God. The writer of Hebrews explains that God appointed Jesus Christ as the heir of all things and that He is presently "upholding all things by the word of His power" (Hebrews 1:2-3). It is not that at one time (but not now) He created and upheld the world, but that He is at present still upholding "all things." Paul confirmed this idea in Colossians when he spoke of Jesus, saying "All things were created through Him and for Him. And He is before all things, and in Him all things consist" (Colossians 1:16-17). Notice that not only was Jesus active in the Creation, but the created world continues to "consist" in Him. It is important to recognize that God originally designed a world of natural laws that would be ideal for Him to providentially use throughout the course of human history. His use of these laws to bring about His purposes is not an interruption of the regular flow of things, since the regular flow of things constantly depends on His power to sustain it. As Richard Bube wrote in his book The Human Quest:

The natural order exists only because God is constantly active in upholding it. God does not use natural processes as if they existed without him. God does not take advantage of natural laws to accomplish his will as if the laws existed without him. We see immediately why the question "Can God intervene in a world ruled by orderly laws?" is meaningless. There is no world ruled by orderly laws except that one constantly maintained in existence by the activity of God (1971, p. 28).

It is because of this fact that scholar John Walton defines providence as "the way God acts through all so-called natural processes, whether in creation, nature, or history" (2001, p. 101). His addition of the adjective "so-called" highlights the fact that the laws of "nature" are perpetually dependant on the supernatural God. In the term providence, then, we see God's perpetual upholding of the entire Universe.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCE

THE general providence of God upholds all nature. The way the term providence is usually applied, however, refers to God's coordination of events in order to bring about specific desired outcomes. This has been referred to as God's special providence. It often is spoken of in the Bible as it is seen in the lives of those who follow him (May, 2014, p. 14). We see the difference between general and specific providence when we compare Matthew 5:45, which says that God "makes His sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the just and on the unjust," with Romans 8:28: "And we know that all things work together for good to those who love God, to those who are the called according to His purpose." In one sense, all life comes from God and the fact that anyone can take a breath is a providential blessing. In another sense, God has promised that all the events in the lives of those who love Him will be orchestrated in a way that they will work together for the ultimate good.

It is important to recognize what the Bible does not say about God's providence. There is an idea that if a person is a faithful child of God, then God will make sure that he or she is always prosperous, has a wonderful spouse, is blessed with children, and lives a life of comfort and ease. That is not what the Bible says. In fact, the Bible is clear that those who love and follow God often experience serious hardships and trials. Paul told Timothy that "all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution" (2 Timothy 3:12). James told his readers to "count it all joy when you fall into various trials, knowing that the testing of your faith produces patience" (James 1:2-3). Peter told his readers who were suffering governmental persecution not to "think it strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened to you; but rejoice to the extent that you partake of Christ's sufferings" (1 Peter 4:12-13). Even the Lord was disciplined in obedience by the things which He suffered (Hebrews 5:8). God does not promise that everything that happens to those who love Him will be good. Instead, He promises that they will work together so that the end result is good.

BIBLE EXAMPLES OF SPECIAL PROVIDENCE

Esther

The name of God is never mentioned in the book of Esther. For that reason, some have questioned its inspiration and place in the canon. A close analysis of the book, however, shows that it meets the criteria for inspiration. The fact that it does not use God's name is significant, because the events that happen in the book provide some of the clearest examples of special providence in all of Scripture.

Let us briefly summarize the story. Esther is a Jew who lives in Shushan, the capital of the Persian Empire. She is orphaned, so her cousin Mordecai raises her as if she were his. In the course of events, the Persian king Ahasuerus dismisses his wife and begins the process of looking for another. Esther is among the young women that Ahasuerus assembles at his palace. She surpasses the others in talent and beauty and becomes the new queen. Mordecai warns her not to reveal that she is a Jew. On one occasion, when Mordecai sat in the king's gate, he uncovered a plot to kill the king. Those involved were found guilty and the event was written in the history book that Ahasuerus kept.

During this time, the wicked general Haman began to advance in station and status with the king. He hated Mordecai because the Jew would not bow to him. Instead of killing Mordecai, Haman tricked the king into issuing a decree that all the Jews should be killed. Esther courageously pleaded with the king to save the Jews. Ultimately, Haman's plot was discovered, he was hanged, and the Jewish people were delivered from destruction. The most interesting aspect of the book of Esther is the underlying working of God through "natural" processes throughout the events taking place.

For instance, of all the young women in the entire kingdom that Ahasuerus could have picked, he chose the Jewess Esther. Her cousin Mordecai was in the perfect place to discover a plot against the king's life, and his deed was written down in the history book. The entry, however, went unnoticed for many days until one "fortuitous" night the king could not sleep. Due to his insomnia, he ordered that the history book be read, and it just so happened that Mordecai's discovery was the chosen text. While the king was deciding what to do to honor Mordecai, Haman entered his presence hoping to request that the king hang Mordecai. Instead, Haman was instructed to parade the Jew through the streets as one whom the king chose to honor. Haman was later hanged on the very gallows that he had built to hang Mordecai.

The number of perfectly aligned events that brought about the Jews' salvation were not coincidences. As John Walton noted, "If we truly understand Esther, it is not saying that there is no God at work, but neither is it saying that there is no circumstance. Instead, it insists that God works through the circumstance.... The only way to understand how God works is to see circumstance as one of his agents" (p. 104). One of the most familiar passages in the text is found in a statement that Mordecai made to Esther. He admonished her to have the courage to go to the king, even knowing that she might die. And he said, "who knows whether you have come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esther 4:14). Notice that Mordecai's statement implies that the circumstances that led to Esther being the queen could have been arranged intentionally and purposefully for her to save the Jews.

It is at this point that we need to consider an important aspect of special providence. God performed miracles in a way that, to the honest observer, left no room for doubt. Anyone who observed a miracle performed by Jesus or another empowered spokesperson from God, if the person was dealing honestly with the situation, could be sure that God's power was directly responsible for the event. When considering providence, however, God's work is often not clear until after the events take place, and even then it is difficult to put a finger on exactly how and where God was active. Mordecai's sentiment of "who knows" captures this facet of providence well. We see this idea in the New Testament as well. When Paul wrote to his friend Philemon, he mentioned that he had come in contact with one of Philemon's former slaves. This slave, Onesimus, had run away from Philemon and become a Christian during his time away. Paul was sending him back, and he wrote to Philemon, "perhaps he departed for a while for this purpose, that you may receive him forever, no longer as a slave but more than a slave, as a beloved brother" (Philemon 15-16).

Paul's use of the word "perhaps" echoes Mordecai's use of "who knows." Both writers were acknowledging that God works through natural, providential means. But they were also conceding that the circumstances under discussion could only be viewed with some uncertainty when trying to determine exactly what parts of their lives and the lives of others were related to God's activity. As May correctly wrote, "Miracles are clearly from God. Providence is always 'perhaps,' except when God in Scripture tells us He is working behind the scenes" (p. 69).

Joseph

The life and times of Joseph, son of Israel, consume the bulk of Genesis chapters 37-50. His story provides another clear example of God's providence in action. Joseph's dad favored him above his other brothers, because he was the son of Jacob's beloved wife Rachel. This favoritism led Jacob to treat him better than his brothers, which fueled their jealousy and hatred toward the young man. In addition, Joseph had dreams in which his brothers, Jacob, and Leah bowed down to him. This infuriated his siblings all the more.

On one occasion, Joseph was sent to check on his brothers as they tended their father's flocks. They conspired

(cont. on p. 43)

FREE

For two-year-olds
through fourth grade

AVAILABLE NOW

BIBLE CURRICULUM

for ages 2 through 6th grade

- Biblically sound: lessons edited by the A.P. writers.
- Free: material for ages two through grade four available free on-line.
- Comprehensive: takes a two-year-old child through the Bible twice before 5th grade.
- Preparatory: 5th and 6th grade classes purchase the A.P. Explorer Series, which covers Christian evidences, morality, the life of Christ, etc.
- Exciting: many activity ideas provided in addition to the dozens of A.P. developed activities; audio clips of recommended songs provided for each lesson.
- Improving: open system format allows for constant improvement of the curriculum.
- Easy: simply go to the A.P. curriculum site, sign up, and start printing!
- Engaging: learning center ideas provided to help reinforce the material.
- Tried and tested: material developed over the past 20 years by qualified teachers; proven to be effective.

For more information visit www.apcurriculum.com
or call
1-800-234-8558

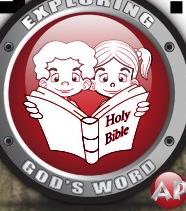

A.P. CURRICULUM EXPLORING GOD'S WORD

Exploring God's Word is unique in that it is an on-line curriculum. Since it is on-line, it can be viewed, downloaded, and printed by anyone with an Internet connection anywhere in the world. Also, the material for two-year-olds through fourth grade is completely free. The only part of the curriculum that needs to be purchased is the material for fifth and sixth grades. Exploring God's Word has already been used to influence thousands of children all over the world. See what it can do for your congregation. We think you will discover that using this curriculum will be one of the best decisions your congregation could make for your children.

www.advancedbiblereader.org

www.apcurriculum.com

Explorer Series Journeys 1-8

A.P. Curriculum on Pinterest
Find visuals and activity ideas on Pinterest www.pinterest.com/apcurriculum

Apologetics Press, Inc.
230 Landmark Drive, Montgomery, AL 36117
www.apologeticspress.org

against him, captured him, and sold him to a band of slave traders. The traders sold him into Egypt. In Egypt, Joseph spent many years in slavery and in prison, but through a series of remarkable events, became the second most prominent man in all the land. Due to a massive famine, his brothers journeyed to Egypt to buy food. There they bowed to Joseph just as he had seen in his dreams. Eventually, Joseph revealed himself to his brothers and brought his family to live in Egypt. When his father died, his brothers feared that Joseph might seek revenge on them. They came to him, begging for his forgiveness. He calmed them and said, “[D]o not be afraid, for am I in the place of God? But as for you, you meant evil against me; but God meant it for good, in order to bring it about as it is this day, to save many people alive” (Genesis 50:19-20).

As we read through the events of Joseph's life, we see many people who were not trying to help Joseph, nor were they attempting to obey God. His brothers sold him into slavery. Slave traders cruelly sold him into Egypt. His first master's wife lied about him. His master, Potiphar, then threw him into prison. And the chief butler forgot about him for two years before bringing his name up to Pharaoh. Obviously, the people in Joseph's life could not see the hand of God, nor were they complicit in God's plan to elevate Joseph. In addition, many of the events were unjust, wrong, and painful to Joseph. God, however, orchestrated these events in Joseph's life so that eventually they turned out “for good.” This is the nature of providence.

PROVIDENCE AND HUMAN FREE WILL

A STUDY of divine providence naturally leads to questions about human free will. If God orchestrates events to bring about desired outcomes, does He force people to act in certain ways? Does He override human free will in order to work providentially? The stories of Esther, Philemon, and Joseph provide us with the answer. God used the choices that the people in the stories freely made, and worked His providence through those choices. At no time did God in the past, or will God in the present or future, override a person's free will.

If God works His providence through the decisions that various people freely choose, that must mean He knows what they will choose. Some have argued that if God knows what a person chooses, then that person is not free to choose, since he or she is “stuck” choosing what God knows he/she will choose (see Barker, 2008, p. 127). The flaw in this argument hinges on the difference between knowledge and cause. Just because a person may have knowledge of an event does not mean that he caused the event or that the person who makes the choice is somehow constrained by this knowledge. A brief thought experiment makes this point clear. Suppose, hypothetically, you knew that a friend of yours drank coffee yesterday morning. Now suppose you could go back in time and watch him choose to drink coffee instead of milk. Did your knowledge that he would choose coffee somehow force his decision? Not at all. He could have chosen coffee because he liked the taste or wanted the caffeine. The fact that you knew what he would do does not mean he was forced to do it or that your knowledge somehow caused it. Similarly, God knows what every person will do. Using that knowledge, He can arrange events to accomplish His ends through natural circumstances.

HOW KNOWLEDGE OF PROVIDENCE HELPS THE SUFFERER

ONE of the primary reasons to study providence is to assimilate the idea into an overall answer that helps explain how a loving, all-powerful God can allow those He loves to suffer. What does knowledge of providence offer the sufferer? First, an understanding of providence assures us that God will never allow any person to suffer or be tempted beyond his/her ability to deal with the suffering. Paul explained this to the Corinthian church when he wrote, “No temptation has overtaken you except such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not allow you to be tempted beyond what you are able, but with the temptation will also make a way of escape, that you may be able to bear it” (1 Corinthians 10:13).

When we suffer, there are times we may feel that we simply cannot endure the pain and sorrow that is crushing us. During such periods of trials and troubles, we must remember that God is still in control of the Universe, and He has solemnly promised us that He will never allow us to suffer or be tempted more than we are able to withstand. While it may seem to us that we cannot hold up under the trials we experience, if God is all-knowing, and if God can providentially arrange the events of human lives to accomplish His ultimate desire, then we can know that He will provide the strength that we need to not only endure, but even to grow through our struggles. The strength He provides may not come in the form or way that we expect. It may come through what others do for us. It may come through something we read in God's Word. It may come through an inspiring story that we read in a book that a friend happened to lend us. Or it may come through a person coming into our lives that is suffering worse than we are and needs our help, channeling our attention from our own pain to constructive ways to help others with theirs.

Second, an understanding of divine providence can help the sufferer understand that God can arrange events so that suffering can have meaning and purpose, even though it is not inherently good. One excellent biblical example is seen in the life of Paul. Paul's life after his conversion to Christianity was eventful to say the least. He took three lengthy missionary journeys, during which he was often in peril. He explained to the church in Corinth that he had been beaten three times, shipwrecked three times, stoned, whipped by the Jews five times, and spent a night and day in the ocean (2 Corinthians 11:22-33). Paul often found himself trying to escape legal authorities that were attempting to imprison or kill him.

On one occasion, Paul was lowered over the city wall of Damascus in a basket to escape being captured by the governor of the city (2 Corinthians 11:32-33). Paul's efforts to avoid capture, however, were not always successful. Once, He was imprisoned and held by the prestigious palace guard. Without an understanding of providence, this situation would seem to the average observer to have a negative effect on Paul and his preaching of the Gospel. Why did Paul have to suffer by being thrown in prison? Why did the church have to suffer through their concern for the apostle? Why did his relatives have to endure the mental anguish of knowing he was imprisoned unjustly? Such questions are legion. Paul provides us with some insight into his situation in the letter he wrote to the church in Philippi. He told them, "But I want you to know, brethren, that the things which have happened to me have actually turned out for the furtherance of the gospel, so that it has become evident to the whole palace guard, and to all the rest, that my chains are in Christ" (Philippians 1:12-13). Notice Paul's use of the word "actually." The implication is that at first, it would not seem like prison would help the cause of Christ and the furtherance of the Gospel. It turns out, however, that even though

Paul had been unjustly imprisoned and punished with evil intent, God providentially arranged the events so that the Gospel message spread.

CONCLUSION

GOD created the world and upholds it by the word of His power. He designed the natural laws that He perpetually sustains in a way that He can work through them to bring about His desired goals. Throughout human history, He has worked both providentially and miraculously. The fact that He used miracles in the past, however, does not mean that He still, or must, use them today in order to accomplish His ultimate will. The Bible provides extensive material on how God has providentially worked in the past, and how He has promised to continue this activity in the present and future. An understanding of God's providence provides a vital aspect of the Christian's overall answer to suffering in the world. Furthermore, the concept of providence can help those who suffer find meaning and comfort through their suffering.

REFERENCES

- Barker, Dan (2008), godless (Berkeley, CA: Ulysses).
- Brain, Marshall (2014), "Why Won't God Heal Amputees?" <http://whywontgodhealamputees.com/>.
- Bube, Richard (1971), The Human Quest (Waco, TX: Word).
- Ehrman, Bart (2008), God's Problem: How the Bible Fails to Answer Our Most Important Question—Why We Suffer (New York: HarperOne).
- Jackson, Wayne (no date), "A Study of Divine Providence," <https://www.christiancourier.com/articles/105-a-study-of-divine-providence>.
- May, Cecil Jr. (2014), Providence: The Silent Sovereignty of God (Nashville, TN: Gospel Advocate).
- Miller, Dave (2003), "Modern-Day Miracles, Tongue-Speaking, and Holy Spirit Baptism: A Refutation," Apologetics Press, <https://www.apologeticspress.org/APContent.aspx?category=11&article=264&topic=293>.
- Miller, Dave (2015), Why People Suffer (Montgomery, AL: Apologetics Press).
- Walton, John (2001), Genesis (Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan).
- Warren, Thomas B. (1972), Have Atheists Proved There is No God? (Jonesboro, AR: National Christian Press).

SPEAKING SCHEDULES

Kyle Butt

April 1-3	Andalusia, AL	(334) 222-3651
April 6,13,20,27	Rogersville, AL	(256) 247-3422

Eric Lyons

April 3-6	Pensacola, FL	(850) 492-0112
April 15-17	Jefferson City, TN	(856) 475-4796
April 29-30	Jacksonville, AL	(256) 435-9356

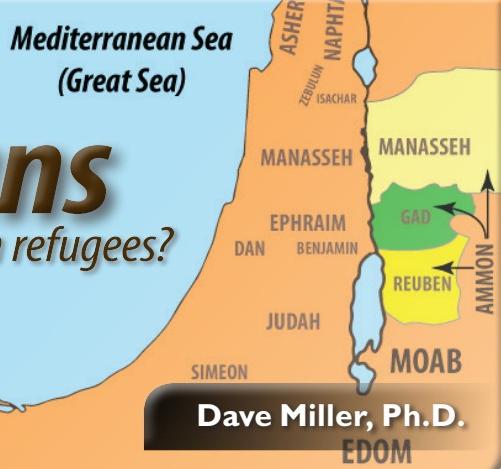

Dave Miller

April 1-3	Abingdon, VA	(276) 628-6253
April 9-10	Heflin, AL	(256) 435-9356
April 15-17	Highland, CA	(909) 862-3678
April 22-24	Bedford, VA	(540) 494-7242

Jeff Miller

April 7,14,21,28	Montgomery, AL	(334) 264-2985
April 5,12,26	Denver, CO	(303) 986-5800
April 22-24	Arlington, TX	(817) 465-6500

Should Christians favor accepting Syrian refugees?

Article In Brief...

Bringing refugees to America from Syria and other countries should be assessed in light of God's Word. The #1 concern of God regarding national sovereignty is the moral and spiritual impact of refugees. The American Founders had the same concern. The "Good Samaritan" principle of Christianity does not imply carte blanche importation of dispossessed peoples without regard to the ensuing spiritual fallout.

THE recent civil war in Syria, involving the Assad regime and various radical Islamic rebel elements and factions—both Sunni and Shiite (Seale, 2012; “Syrian Refugees...,” 2012; Cloud and Abdulrahim, 2013; “Migrant Crisis...,” 2015; “Kingdom Slams...,” 2015) has resulted in millions of Syrian Muslims fleeing their homeland. This circumstance has sparked a considerable discussion among Americans and the world regarding the propriety of refusing to receive refugees into one’s home country. Setting politics and other considerations aside, the Christian’s primary concern is to ascertain God’s will on such a matter. What does He want Christians to do in response to this “humanitarian” crisis?

The only way to know God’s will on any subject is to go to the only resource on the planet that contains that will—the Bible. What is God’s will regarding accepting refugees and immigrants from other countries? Interestingly, the only civil law code in human history authored by God Himself is the Law of Moses. When one cares to examine everything the Bible says about treatment of “strangers” under the Law of Moses, it is quickly evident that the #1 concern of God in the acceptance of foreigners into one’s country is their moral, religious, and spiritual condition. That is, God was vitally concerned about the spiritual impact the foreigners would have on Israel’s ability to remain loyal to Him, untainted by moral and religious contamination. Hence, God issued several civil decrees that strictly regulated the acceptance of foreigners into Israelite society. Among other strictures, foreigners were required to:

- observe the Sabbath (Exodus 20:10; Deuteronomy 5:14)
- be excluded from Passover (Exodus 12:43,45—unless the foreigner was willing to naturalize via circumcision [Exodus 12:48])

- refrain from eating blood (Leviticus 17:12)
- abstain from sexual immorality, including homosexuality, bestiality, incest, and adultery (Leviticus 18:26)
- not blaspheme the name of God (Leviticus 24:16,22)—an offense that at one time was upheld by American courts (e.g., in People v. Ruggles, the New York State Supreme Court declared: “Blasphemy against God, and contumelious reproaches, and profane ridicule of Christ or the Holy Scriptures, are offenses punishable at the common law, whether uttered by words or writings.”)

For those who (1) believe in God and trust God, and (2) understand that His directives in the civil law code given to the Israelites were “holy and just and good” (Romans 7:12; cf. Psalm 19:7-11; Psalm 119:72,77,97,113,142,163), then such directives—which emanated from the mind of Deity—carry great weight in sorting out the current discussion regarding the acceptance of foreign refugees.

It would seem that foreigners who immigrated to Israel were not required by God to convert to Judaism. However, they were strictly forbidden from engaging in any religious practices that were deemed unacceptable according to God’s will. For example, one of the religious precepts practiced by the Canaanite peoples of Ammon and Phoenicia was to offer their children as a propitiatory sacrifice to their god Molech. Such a false religious practice was an abomination to God. He demanded that the death penalty be invoked for such conduct (Leviticus 18:21). Religious freedom did not extend to an Ammonite immigrant to the extent that he was allowed to practice his religion on this point; he was to be executed if he did (Leviticus 20:2).

Contemplate the following scenario. Suppose in ancient Israel the Moabites attacked the Ammonites, or the Ammonites themselves experienced an internal political upheaval, causing thousands of Ammonite refugees to flee north, west, or south to the corresponding transjordanic tribal lands of Manasseh, Gad, and Reuben (see map on previous page). Would God have insisted that godly love for neighbors would require that the Israelites take them in? The relevant passages indicate that God would not have wanted them received unconditionally. He would not have sanctioned a massive influx of pagan peoples into the heart of Israelite society, bringing their immoralities and false religion with them, with no safeguards or means by which to protect the moral and spiritual health of the Israelites. Further, what Ammonite would want to come to Israel where he would not be allowed to practice his religion, and where the morals and customs of the people would contradict his own? One could only imagine that Ammonites would not want to be subjected to such rigid moral conditions. However, they most certainly would want to come if they discovered that they could retain their evil religious practices, get welfare money from the Israelites, and locate in such numbers that they could take over local city government and schools.

THE FOUNDERS

THE Founders of the American Republic possessed precisely the same concerns. To them, “freedom” did not mean permission to engage in any practice deemed by Christian standards to be immoral or threatening to the Christian community. Consider, for example, prominent Founder Gouverneur Morris, who served as a Lieutenant Colonel in the New York State militia, was a member of the Continental Congress, signing both the Articles of Confederation and the U.S. Constitution, served as America’s Minister Plenipotentiary to France during the notorious French Revolution (1792-1794), and also served in the U.S. Senate. Though the French sought to establish a Republic like America, Morris’ observations of French life, which he witnessed firsthand, led him to believe the population of France was incapable of governing themselves and creating a Republic like we enjoy. Why? Among other concerns, he saw very little evidence of worship of the true God, and with an air of regret, he observed: “I do not yet perceive that reformation of morals without which liberty is but an empty sound” (Morris, 1888, 2:7-8, emp. added). As the storm clouds of the Revolution were gathering over France, writing from Paris in 1789, he explained:

The materials for a revolution in this country are very indifferent. Everybody agrees that there is an utter prostration of morals—but this general position can never convey to the American mind the degree of depravity.... The great mass of the people have no religion but their priests, no law but their superiors, no morals but their interest.... Paris is perhaps as wicked a spot as exists. Incest, murder, bestiality, fraud, rapine, oppression, baseness, cruelty;...every bad passion exerts its peculiar energy. How the conflict will terminate Heaven knows. Badly I fear; that is to say, in slavery (1:68-69,200-201, emp. added).

He concluded that the French were “a nation not yet fitted by education and habit for the enjoyment of freedom” (1:109). Consequently, the Founders did not encourage immigration from such countries whose population would seriously undermine the underpinnings of the American Republic. [NOTE: For another example among many, see the opinion of the State Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth v. Nesbit in 1859 which declared the attitude of the Founders and the nation as a whole in its utter rejection of pagan morality.]

The vast majority of the Syrian refugees are Muslims. They do not share Christian values in several key, critical points (including polygamy, treatment of women, and severing limbs as punishment—Miller, 2005, pp.

177ff.,192-197). Muslim enclaves already in America, like those in several European countries, gradually transform their neighborhoods into Islamic strongholds where Sharia law is applied (Gaffney, 2015; Hickford, 2015; Hohmann, 2015; James, 2014; Kern, 2015a; Kern, 2015b; Bailey, 2015; Selk, 2015a; Selk, 2015b; Sheikh, 2015, Spencer, 2014). Though it may take many years, gradual encroachment on American culture due to “immigration jihad” will conceivably transform the U.S. into an Islamic nation. The Founders so designed the Republic that the citizens govern themselves. Hence, the moral, spiritual, and religious condition of the majority of citizens ultimately determines which politicians are installed on every level of government, what laws are made, and what content the teachers will teach in public schools. In short, the influx of Muslims will radically transform American civilization. Such an observation hardly constitutes racism or hate speech.

GOOD SAMARITAN?

BUT what about the “Good Samaritan”? Shouldn’t Christians show compassion? Most certainly. But how? What does God expect in such a situation? The story of the Good Samaritan pertains to individuals treating other individuals kindly. It does not refer to God’s will regarding the immigration policies of nations. On the contrary, God expressed His will with regard to immigration in His civil law code He gave to the Israelites. Further, when the Good Samaritan rendered aid to the stranger he encountered, he saw to his immediate needs (Luke 10:33-35). This attention did not entail transporting the man to the Samaritan’s own country or home—many miles away.

Many political and religious disturbances occur in many countries of the world and have for thousands of years. America has long rendered assistance to a host of needy peoples of various countries. Yet Christian compassion does not—in God’s sight—necessitate bringing large numbers of displaced peoples to America without suitable regard for the potential moral and spiritual threat to the health, safety, and future of the nation. There is nothing in the Bible that would lead us to believe that refusing refugees into the country is a violation of the Bible principle of compassion and concern for others. Should the good Samaritan have taken into his home a complete stranger without regard to the man's moral and religious condition? Should he have jeopardized the safety of his own wife and children when he left to continue his business, as the text says he did? The Bible, in fact, teaches that we have just as much responsibility to be kind and benevolent to ourselves, our families, and our fellow citizens as we do to peoples of other countries (Matthew 22:39; Ephesians 5:25,28). Is God, Himself, guilty of violating His own benevolent nature when He placed restrictions on immigrants and refugees to Israel? Clearly, carte blanche reception of refugees into one's own country does not trump all other considerations—not the least of which is the spiritual impact of that reception.

A far more rational, appropriate solution would be to assist the refugees with returning to their own country, or other Muslim countries, by interceding on their behalf, whether diplomatically or militarily, to right the wrongs being inflicted on them by their persecutors. There is nothing about Christianity that necessitates relocating foreigners to America who possess conflicting—and counterproductive—moral and religious values.

So the question of receiving refugees into the U.S. is not about “compassion,” benevolence, or Christian kindness. After all, America leads the world in providing the greatest amount of humanitarian assistance in the Syrian refugee crisis (Chorley, 2015). Rather, in keeping with God's own assessment of nations, the key, all-encompassing issue that our national leaders ought to be taking into consideration is: what will be the moral and religious impact with the entrance of these peoples, and will their presence over the long term affect the ability of America to retain its unique and historically unparalleled status? Indeed, will the moral and religious syncretism, that will inevitably result from such decisions, enable the God of the Bible to continue to bless America?

REFERENCES

- Bailey, Sarah (2015), “In the First Majority Muslim U.S. City, Residents Tense About Its Future,” The Washington Post, November 21, <https://goo.gl/KW5KMc>.
- Chorley, Matt (2015), “British Aid to Refugees Smashes Through £1BILLION as Cameron Boasts UK is Spending More Than Any EU Country,” Daily Mail, September 4, <http://goo.gl/SrfI7S>.
- Cloud, David and Raja Abdulrahim (2013), “U.S. Has Secretly Provided Arms Training to Syria Rebels Since 2012,” Los Angeles Times, June 21, <http://articles.latimes.com/2013/jun/21/world/la-fg-cia-syria-20130622>.
- Commonwealth v. Nesbit* (1859), Pa. 398; 1859 Pa. LEXIS 240.
- Gaffney, Frank (2015), “Sharia Shaping a New Europe,” Secure Freedom Radio Podcasts, Center for Security Policy, September 21, <http://www.centerforsecuritypolicy.org/2015/09/21/sharia-shaping-a-new-europe/>.
- Hickford, Michele (2015), “Already Here: Meet America's FIRST Muslim Majority City,” Allenbwest.com, November 22, <http://www.allenbwest.com/2015/11/already-here-meet-americas-first-muslim-majority-city/>.
- Hohmann, Leo (2015), “Major U.S. City Poised to Implement Islamic Law,” July 23, <http://www wnd com/2015/07/major-u-s-city-poised-to-implement-islamic-law/#c23Cxzir1klfk84R.99>.
- James, Dean (2014), “Christians Win Big Lawsuit Against Muslim Thugs in Dearborn, Michigan!” America's Freedom Fighters, March 24, <http://www.americasfreedomfighters.com/2014/03/24/christians-win-big-lawsuit-against-muslim-thugs-in-dearborn-michigan/>.
- Kern, Soeren (2015a), “European ‘No-Go’ Zones: Fact or Fiction? Part 1: France,” Gatestone Institute, January 20 <http://www.gatestoneinstitute.org/5128/france-no-go-zones>.
- Kern, Soeren (2015b), “European ‘No-Go’ Zones: Fact or Fiction? Part 2: Britain,” Gatestone Institute, February 3, <http://www.gatestoneinstitute.org/5177/no-go-zones-britain>.
- “Kingdom Slams Racism Against Muslim Refugees” (2015), Arab News, November 25, <http://www.arabnews.com/featured-news/840761>.
- “Migrant Crisis: One Million Enter Europe in 2015” (2015), BBC News, December 22, <http://www.bbc.com/news/world-europe-35158769>.
- Miller, Dave (2005), The Quran Unveiled (Montgomery, AL: Apologetics Press).
- Morris, Anne Cary, ed. (1888), The Diary and Letters of Gouverneur Morris (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons).
- People v. Ruggles*, 8 Johns. 290 (N.Y. 1811).
- Seale, Patrick (2012), “What Is Really Happening in Syria?” Washington Report, August, 17-18, <http://www.wrmea.org/2012-august/what-is-really-happening-in-syria.html>.
- Selk, Avi (2015a), “Irving City Council Backs State Bill Muslims Say Targets Them,” The Dallas Morning News, March 19, <http://www.dallasnews.com/news/metro/20150319-dispute-on-islam-roils-irving.ece>.
- Selk, Avi (2015b), “Irving Muslims Join Voter Rolls in Record Numbers,” The Dallas Morning News, May 10, <http://www.dallasnews.com/news/politics/local-politics/20150510-irving-muslims-join-voter-rolls-in-record-numbers.ece>.
- Sheikh, Zia (2015), “Islamic Center of Irving Statement Regarding ‘Shariah Court’,” Islamic Center of Irving, <http://irvingmasjid.org/index.php/ici-statement-regarding-sharia-court>.
- Spencer, Robert (2014), “Dearborn: Muslim at City Council Meeting Calls for Sharia Patrols, Restriction on Free Speech,” Jihad Watch, February 22, <http://www.jihadwatch.org/2014/02/dearborn-muslim-at-city-council-meeting-calls-for-sharia-patrols-restriction-on-free-speech>.
- “Syrian Refugees Flood into Turkey” (2012), The Telegraph, March 13, <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/middleeast/syria/9141678/Syrian-refugees-flood-into-Turkey.html>.

NOTE FROM The Editor

AP Curriculum Update

It was February of 2013—three years ago—that we launched the Apologetics Press on-line Bible class curriculum under the title “Exploring God’s Word.” As of February of this year more than 7,500 have signed up to access the curriculum at our Web site. That number represents hundreds of churches in over 40 states and over 30 countries, with some 150 denominations and Christian schools participating. Indeed, thousands of children from all over the world have been influenced for good.

Here is a biblically sound Bible class curriculum that takes a two-year-old child through the Bible twice before the 5th grade. At that point, 5th and 6th grade classes utilize the A.P. Explorer Series which covers a variety of subjects, including Christian evidences, morality, the life of Christ, and much more. Many activity ideas are provided in addition to audio clips of recommended songs for each lesson. The materials through the 4th grade are free. The only material that needs to be purchased is the Explorer Series lessons for 5th and 6th graders.

The screenshot shows a web-based curriculum outline. At the top, there's a navigation bar with links like "Home," "About AP," "Contact Us," "Log In," and "Logout." Below that is a search bar. The main content area is titled "Curriculum Outline" and "Quarter One: Year 1". It lists eight lessons for "Part I: Exploring God's Word":

- Lesson 1: Learning About God's Word - See Books & Materials
- Lesson 2: Publishing The Testimony Sheet 1-4 of the Creation Month: The Creation of Land and Sea (See Books & Materials)
- Lesson 3: Publishing Craft Work (Books)
- Lesson 4: Exploring The World of Plants: Day 5 of Creation - See Books & Materials
- Lesson 5: Publishing the Books and the Works of Birds: Day 7 of Creation - See Books & Materials
- Lesson 6: Cut Out and All the Animals - After the Deluge (Day 8 of Creation - See Books & Materials)
- Lesson 7: Make These "Traditional" West African: The First Men - See Books & Materials
- Lesson 8: Exploring the Wonders of the Human Body - See Books & Materials

At the bottom, there are links for "Part II: Bible Stories" and "Lesson Pack".

This curriculum is an “open system” format which allows for constant improvement. Those who use the curriculum are, in fact, encouraged to offer suggestions and additions that can be incorporated into the curriculum. Simply go to the A.P. Web site and click on “Bible Class Curriculum.” The curriculum page contains all instructions for accessing the material. The curriculum director, Dr. Jeff Miller, has worked tirelessly over the past three years to finalize and post all lessons for the entire curriculum—a task that will be achieved within another three months, at which point improvements on the earliest lessons will begin again.

We think the children in your congregation will be significantly benefitted by using this outstanding Bible class program.

Dave Miller

See Page 42
for More Details